Occupational Orientation

glazing, arc welding, carpentry and woodwork, tool fitting, plumbing, water systems, concrete work, small gas engines, machine repair, electricity, sheet metal work, lathe operation, and forging. Demonstrations are an integral part of the shop instruction. All students complete at least one project to take home. The instruction in sanitation, drainage, and conservation involves the use of school facilities and experience with practical problems.

Benefits

We feel the course is an important addition to our high school curriculum. It provides special training for a group of students previously neglected. It provides students the opportunity to obtain a marketable skill. Employers are more willing to hire a student who has completed the program and pay a higher wage than for a beginning employee without the training. The occupational orientation program serves a group of students who are likely to remain as citizens of the community.

Guidance counselors feel that the program can reduce dropouts in that it creates interest on the part of students to remain in school. The program gives students an opportunity to become acquainted with occupations and skills which, in turn, increases their desire to remain in school by allowing them to participate actively in a part of the school's program.
